

Foxgloves produce tall spikes of tubular, spotted flowers in shades of purple, pink, and white. This biennial plant grows 1-2 meters tall in its second year. Foxgloves prefer partial shade and moist, well-drained soil. All parts of the plant are toxic if ingested. The plant is source of digitalis, used in heart medications.